Making a Difference

Hand Made Paper

Pure Fiji initiated the handmade paper project in Fiji to provide an income to villagers in isolated regions. Beautiful handmade paper is made from cellulose found in plant fibre, which is literally beaten to a pulp and dispersed in water. This fibre, the main ingredient of paper, is sourced in different forms from bark, leaf, and grass of local plants and trees. Pure Fiji uses the paper for packaging soaps and in the production of exquisite stationary items.

Pure Fiji's paper-making project is almost entirely run by the women of these rural communities, empowering them in ways they have never experienced before. Along with training in paper making, we provide these women with some basic, essential business training. The women then took it upon themselves to organise production shifts so that while one group made paper they knew that their children, homes, and gardens were being taken care of.

Today, paper making is the major income earner for the village. With the income earned the village has been able to expand their paper making facilities with a new drying house and generator, and create an ongoing fund for improving the equipment used in making paper. Now the papermakers can also afford school fees and have made improvements to the local primary school. Additional classrooms and a library have been built for a secondary school - which means 150 children from the paper making village and neighboring villages have access to higher education.

Perhaps the greatest long-term goal the paper making community has recently achieved is the building and setting up of a village store. This is complete with a refrigerator and deep freezer that are powered by a generator also purchased by the women. The store brings in additional income from trade with surrounding villages and the benefit of being able to preserve meat and other produce. This has brought about a more balanced diet for the entire community throughout the year.

Pure Fiji is also working with the village in the establishment of a hydro electric scheme which will provide a source of electricity for the village by harnessing the power of the river that runs adjacent.

Aid through Empowerment - Small Business Mentoring Program

In the true South Pacific spirit, Pure Fiji has always believed success can only be achieved if it is shared. With the knowledge and experience acquired growing up in an island culture for all to benefit from the success of Pure Fiji, it in turn needs to reach out to the wider community providing inspiration and a hand up, not a hand-out.

Looking beyond, to the greater good of the communities, local craftsmen and women can access business development and small business mentoring from Pure Fiji, delivered in a comprehensive manner, including teaching basic business practice.

A few of the longest running small business mentoring programs have been the 'Basket Ladies' program, 'Kara the Flower Lady' and 'Handmade paper' program: "Where there's a hand - there's a heart & soul."

Basket Ladies

Pure Fiji supports a community of women basket weavers that live outside Suva.

The ladies claim to fame are the baskets they supplied for the launch of Pure Fiji at the Emmy Awards beauty event in 2002.

This basket is now lovingly referred to as the 'Emmy basket' and has provided a little touch of gold dust in the community with the purchase of a water tank and payment of school fees for the children.
